

"Hollywood" by Nick Marino

Medium:

Pen and Marker

About:

Lately, I've been fascinated with American entertainment culture and its hyperbolic use of gender to sell its products. In particular, hyper-sexuality has taken precedence in television and film. Today's superstars achieve fame and fortune first and foremost for their sexual persona, often regardless of their artistic abilities. "Hollywood" is my own hyperbole. It's my dystopic ruminations on an entertainment culture gone mad with lust, where a mere husk needs only be defined by a powerful sexual gender identity to achieve success.

Bio:

Nick Marino is a writer, cartoonist, and musician based in Pittsburgh, PA. His superhero satire webcomic, Super Haters (superhaters.com), is published daily. His time travel comedy webcomic, Time Log (timelog.audioshocker.com), is published every Thursday. He produces two and a half weekly podcasts and you can listen to them on the AudioShocker (audioshocker.com). He also produces instrumental music as Nik Furious (nikfurious.com), and he posts weekly sketches on his personal blog (nickmarino.net).